BELLES OF THE FORGOTTEN PAST

Who Died In The Early Years Of Life When Town Was Young.

MEMORIES RECALLED.

Pretty Girls Whose Graves Are Uncared For In Pioneer Graveyard.

In the early days of Hopkinsville, 80 or 90 years ago, the growing young town was noted as much for the beauty of its girls as is the Hopkinsville of to-day. Every once in a while, a popular society girl, or a young schoolgirl just budding into womanhood, would pass away and a procession of sorrowful friends and bereaved relatives would wind their way to the little graveyard on the river bank and the last funeral hymn would be sung beside the open grave. Many such graves are now uncared for in the old graveyard. It would be a beautiful tribute if the girls of the present day would raise by a popular subscription a fund sufficient to place a special tablet to the memory of the girls who were buried in the pioneer graveyard nearly a hundred years ago, when the monument is erected next year. There are enough school girls in Hopkinsville to raise a nice sum for this purpose by giving only 10 cents each. Below will be found a list of some of these forgotten girls, whose graves can still be identified. No doubt some of our very old citizens can recall some of them, whose names are strangely unfamiliar at this time.

Young Girls

Elizabeth Breathitt, 1804-1827. Virginia Harrison, 1807-1825. Frances L. Gibson, 1825-1844. Henrietta McDaniel, 1806-1823. Elizabeth H. Messick, 1835-1852. Letitia J. Price, 1818-1834.

Mrs. Luther Ward, formerly Miss Rebecca Cox, of Gracey, died at her home in Garfield, Kansas. Wednesday; her body will be brought here and taken to Gracey to be buried in the family burying ground.

Mrs. Ward was a daughter of Mr. Robt. E. Cox, and was married a few years ago and went to Kansas to make her home. She leaves one child of many relatives, and a wide circle of friends in this country who are saddened by her untimely death.

NEARLY 9,000

Official Returns Are In From Every County Except One.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 18.—Official returns from every county in the State except Johnson have been received by the Secretary of State. They show a plurality for Bryan of 10,250. As Johnson county went Republican, something like 1,200, it can be seen that the official plurality will be slightly less than 9,000.

The indictment was for violation of the age of consent law.

The walls will be adorned with maps and charts. A supply of books and other literature will be on the table.

From five o'clock to 5:30 moving and other pictures will be shown for the Sunday School children and their friends. This will be free to all.

At 7:30 p. m. there will be a mass meeting. There will be an admission fee of ten cents for grown people and five cents for children. The moving picture machine and stereopticon is the best on the market. The admission fee is simply to pay expenses of the machine and the operator. By dividing the expenses, no one will be burdened and the Society will be relieved. The pictures are from the mission fields and are of the greatest interest to young and old. Those who wish good seats, or seats at all, should be on hand early.

TO RAISE STANDARD.

Examination of State Guard Officers On at Frankfort.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 18.—Acting under instructions from Governor Wilson the board of examiners today began the examination of commissioned officers of the state guard. Those who do not come up to a fixed standard will be dropped from the service.

The examining board consists of Colonel Jouett Henry, Third infantry; Col. W. N. Hughes, governor's staff; Col. Chas. D. Clay, governor's staff; Major A. McLean, Moffatt, staff corps, and Captain Robert N. Kreiger, First infantry.

The officers of companies A and L, the Frankfort companies, will be examined, and the board will sit at Louisville until December 2. The trip through western and eastern Kentucky will take until Dec. 31.

Old Board Will Cease.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 17.—The Kentucky state board of fire underwriters will cease to exist as a rate-making association today and will be succeeded by an organization which will be known as the Fire Prevention Bureau of Kentucky. The necessity for such a change was brought out in the annual report of President Wheeler, of the Kentucky state board of fire underwriters at its morning session at the Galt house.

Ten Years of Eczema.

Reports on eczema dating back ten years show the value of external treatment. Druggist L. L. Elgin, of this city, can tell any sufferer what reports he has been getting from patients who used oil of wintergreen, thymol and glycerine in liquid form, as compounded in D. D. Prescription. It would be interesting to know whether any person cured as much as 10 years ago has had another touch of the disease.

BARN BURNED.

Building and Contents Destroyed by Fire.

A large tobacco barn on the farm of Mr. W. W. Eddins, near Limestone, was destroyed by fire a few days ago. The origin of the flames is unknown, but one theory is that a tramp spent the night in the building and left a fire in it. The barn contained several thousand pounds of tobacco, owned jointly by Mr. Eddins and a cropper named Minor, and also a lot of farming utensils. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

Value of Insurance.

Fires originate in unexpected places and from unknown causes. Doubtless some one who reads this article will sustain the next loss.

Are YOU insured and have you the best insurance your money can buy?

The Giant Insurance Agency (Incorporated), settles their losses promptly and equitably and guarantees to sell their policies at as low rates as any company doing business. Office in First National Bank building. Both phones.

ILLINOIS MAN

Buys Good Farm in South Christian.

Mr. P. P. Huffman, who resides about five miles south of this city on the Clarksville pike, has sold his farm to Mr. Fred Pool, of Herrin, Ill. There are fifty acres in the tract. The price was not made public. Possession will be given at once and Mr. Pool will immediately begin the erection of a fine residence. Mr. Huffman will move to this city.

ARMY DESERTER
Killed While Escaping Is Buried at Jackson.

Jackson, Ky., Nov. 18.—The funeral of Lewis B. Cole, who was shot last week while attempting to escape from the guardhouse at Vancouver, Washington, took place at the Sewell graveyard. Young Cole was a deserter from the army and had enlisted under another name and later was discovered and placed under arrest. He was killed by one of the guards. His parents were former residents of Jackson, but about two years ago removed to Washington.

Murray High School Students Are Expelled.

Paducah, Ky., Nov. 19.—Twenty-five young men and women, pupils of the Murray (Ky.) high school, were suspended from school for violation of the blue laws, and a pretty schoolma'am who chaperoned them on a possum hunt, is out of a position. There is a rule in force which

To Complete Fund of $400,000 For Colored College.

Mrs. Russel Sage has given $25,000 towards establishing a college for negroes in Kentucky, to be a branch of Berea. This brings the fund for this purpose up to $350,000 from outside sources, leaving $50,000 to be raised in Kentucky, which is being rapidly done. Prof. A. C. Weeden was in Hopkinsville this week in the interest of this movement and addressed a large meeting of colored people at Freeman's chapel Thursday night. Other speakers were Prof. J. W. Dinsmore, K. N. Smith and Rev. Moppins.

Not Many Birds.

The hunters have had poor results so far this season. Dr. E. H. Barker, R. J. Carothers, E. B. Long and A. B. Overshiner opened the hunting season at Ed Lindsay's near Elkton, and killed 59 birds the first day. They have returned.

C. O. Prowse and A. S. Gant killed 35 the first day out.

H. W. Tibbs and Prof. Hamlett bagged 29 on the opening day.

M. E. Bacon and Jesse Burris had only 21 to their credit after a hard day's work.

STAGE SCENERY.

Modern Settings Tax the Ingenuity of the Builders.

The big scenic artists do little actual painting beyond making the model, unless they have a panoramic effect. That they do themselves, standing on the piano bridge, many feet from the floor, the platform is lowered, the floor lowered. The panoramic effects are hard to handle. One difficulty is to avoid fluttering when a draft sweeps across the stage. Mountains that tremble hazily are not conducive to illusion.

With the elaborate productions of late years the importance of the builder of scenes has increased. Everybody's Magazine. Formerly, when the scenery consisted merely of canvas stretched over a wooden frame, it was simple enough. But the struggle for realism and sensational effects has developed difficult problems for the builder of stage scenery to solve. Every scene must be made so that it can be folded into strips five feet nine inches wide, because the doors of the baggage cars in which it is transported are only six feet in breadth. Also every piece must be light and so constructed that one scene can be removed and another put in place without taking more than half an hour. It may take thirty hours of continuous work to get the scenery "set up" to use a technical expression, after it is brought into the theater. After that the work of changing a scene is comparatively easy.

A DOGS' CLUB.

London's Luxurious Resort For Aristocratic Canine Pets.

London is the only city in the world boasting dog houses. There is an pleasant suit of rooms near the Trenadero and close to Regent street. Handsome rugs cover the floors, the windows are veiled in lace and silk, and luxurious sofas are ranged against the walls, while a profusion of soft pillows are scattered about for the comfort of aristocratic dogs who prefer the floor for their beds. Wicker baskets are provided for the smaller pets. The membership fee is half a sovereign, but this does not include meals, baths or tips to the attendants.

Ladies going shopping or to the theater leave their pups and poodles at the canine and girl's hotel, which is in charge at all times a few shillings for looking after it, but if the dog is fed half a crown is charged. This pays for a muton chop and milk. A whole crown provides the little animal with minced chicken. For a half sovereign Fido is bathed, brushed and perfumed, and if he is a French poodle his hair is carefully combed. A veterinary is attached to the club to see that only dogs in perfect health are admitted, all sick members being quarantined in a separate room. Blankets, boots, collars, harness, soap and brushes and all the accessories of a fashionable dog's toilet as well as dog medicines are sold at the club--New York Sun.

A Candied Critic.

"A criticism that has helped me a great deal in my work comes from a man to whom I took a picture to be framed," said a young woman who spends much of her time copying in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. "As the picture progressed my friends told me it was fine, but some of the other copyists said it had value, character, color, coloring and all those things, and even one of the guards in the gallery got very friendly one day and remarked that it was the best copy of that picture that he had seen. I began to think that maybe after all my several years of study I might begin to bear fruit. At the frame I placed beside the original frame, and the frame began to figure on the wall."

"I'll tell you, miss," he said, "that frame will come to $3.98."

"If I were you, I'd get something cheaper for that picture."

Setting the River on Fire.

In English times, when each family was obliged to own its own fire, it sometimes happened that a very gentle man would turn his sieve so rapidly as to cause it to catch fire. The style of sieve used in those days was called a "teme," and it became a customary saying that a lazy man would never set the teme on fire. Now, it happens that the name of the river Thames is pronounced like the name of this old sieve, and after so long a time, when the old fashioned teme was forgotten, it was thought that setting the teme on fire meant setting the river on fire, and that is why today we say that a stupid person will never set the river on fire.

Espionage.

"When I first started out hunting apartments I went through a long, piteous dissertation," said the woman with a haunted look and weary feet. "Now I go in and say to the elevator man or janitor: 'Apartments?' 'Rooms?' 'Price?' 'Keep 'em.' I get along just as well, and it saves lots of time. Try it!"--New York Times.

The Weather.
FOR KENTUCKY—Fair and continued warm Saturday.

There have been ten deaths from football this fall, to say nothing of many broken bones and other injuries.

The returns from the state election will be canvassed next Monday. The Democratic majority will be a little less than 9,000 in the biggest vote ever cast in the state.

Gov.-elect A. C. Shallenberger is confined to his room at Lincoln Hotel, Lincoln, Neb., and is suffering from a fractured leg. He was injured while being initiated as a member of the Shriner's Thursday night.

The sale of the Burley pool to the American Tobacco Co. is causing general rejoicing all over Kentucky, but it does not help the farmers of the Black Patch much.

Two more of the night riders under arrest at Union City, Tenn., have asked to be allowed to confess. Gov. Patterson's energetic work has knocked the bottom out of night riding in the Reelfoot region.

Judge Wells was abundantly able to take care of himself in the Calvary recount. In fact at every turn he proves himself a little too smart for the sympathizers with lawlessness, who seem to be dying hard. The people of this district need the services of such men as Judge Wells.

Major Tom L. Johnson, of Cleve-land, for years reputed to be a millionaire several times over, has announced that practically his entire fortune has been lost. He said that he would be compelled to give up his home on Euclid avenue and also to dispose of his automobiles. He added that a large part of his fortune had been spent in an effort to save the properties left by his brother, the late Albert Johnson. He added that he would run for Mayor again.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or impeded hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is absolute, unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be restored.

Nine cases out of ten are caused by Deafness, nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus lining.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Oatmeal Cure. Send for circulars free.

AMUSEMENTS.

Zinn's Musical Co., which began a three-night's engagement at Holland's Opera House, Thursday night, has been playing to good houses. The opening bill was a "Japanese Courtship," and the performance was greatly enjoyed by the large audience. The staging of the production afforded excellent opportunities for artistic scenic effects, and they were fully availed of by the management. The setting was very pretty and the tasteful Japanese costumes added very considerably to the beauty of the picture, being gorgeous in the extreme. The dancing of the chorus girls was most graceful and the music was well chosen and beautifully rendered.

Last night the company presented "The Telephone Girl." The feature of this production is the cake-walk, which virtually stampedes the house. The play goes off with a snap and a vim which gets the hand from the audience often enough to make things lively. There will be a matinee at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon and prices will be 15¢ and 25¢ to all parts of the house. The bill selected for the matinee is "The Prince and the Girl." The piece is most entertaining and that is all it tries to be. As a conglomeration of mirth, music and mirth it is said to be in the N. 1 class, an easy leader and a show well worth twice the price.

"Teeny Weezy" will be put on tonight, this showing the company's engagement here. This production is clean, well-costumed and full of rapid action. The Triumph of a New Idea.

It has been a subject of comment that the usual features of the Sunday newspapers showed too little variety. A recent departure in Sunday journalism has met with popular recognition and approval. The great illustrated weeklies and monthlies no longer have a monopoly of the periodical field.

Conan Doyle received $25,000 for the American serial rights of his last story, the highest price ever paid for similar rights. Anthony Hope, Jack London, Sewell Ford and many other popular novelists contribute to the publication which set the pace by paying this record price. Celebrated men and women write constantly for it on all subjects of timely interest.

Clever verse, wit, humor and interesting miscellany complete a most interesting table of contents. It is profusely illustrated by the leading artists.

NEW CONTRACT

Made by the Growers of Ly-

Paducah, Ky., Nov. 18.—Negotiations are said to have been entered into between Lyon county planters and the Farmers' Union and Society of Equity pool to handle the tobacco crop this year. The break came at the Lamaco and Edyville meetings Nov. 7, when 500 planters declared they would stay out of the Planters' Protective Association unless their terms were agreed to. They declare that they have been offered nine cents for their loose leaf and they insist on a guarantee of that much on delivery of their tobacco to the pricing houses.

TRAINING HARRINGTON

By LULU JOHNSON.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Crisp and bracing was the morning as Harrington came out of bed. He drew great drafts of the cool air down into his lungs, arousing himself that people who took vacations in the hot months were fools indeed. He even felt sorry for poor Fannie, who was left behind in the city. A few weeks of this bracing air would do her more good than the five-dollar-a-visit specialist who looked grave and shook his head when he stood by the bedside and declared that she must have comeplete rest.

It was true that Harrington himself had wanted to take his vacation in August, and when Fannie's collapse had prevented his leaving then he had stormed and chafed and succeeded in making everybody else uncomfortable and feverish by varying degrees, according to their temperaments and fondness for Fannie. Harrington's calm assumption that Fannie had no right to be ill when he wished to go on his vacation was irritating to the others.

As the steamer moved slowly between banks on which the green was giving way to the first blush of autumn that the world seemed good to Harrington, and he could even think kindly of the little woman who lay at home in a darkened room and whose breakdown had made him responsible for his delayed vacation. In August he would have gone to the shore, as was his custom, but in the latter part of September the country offered greater appeal, so he was to spend a month with his sister. The latter had lent no end to the call of the city, but had remained content to live a farmer's wife as she had been born a farmer's daughter.

It was afternoon when the train pulled into the tiny station. The ride had been hot and dusty, and, after the short morning on the boat, the worse by contrast. Harrington met his brother-in-law with the pleasant patronage of a smile, for he was a good cousin and considered that he had discharged his obligation when he offered the other a smoke with the explanation that it was a city cigar.

"I guess most of them come from the city," suggested Sam Dryer, with a chuckle, as he lit a cigarette and applied for a match. "I guess you're about the twentieth chap this summer that's given me a cigar with the air of expecting me to drop dead with delight because it comes from the city."

"You don't have to smoke it if you don't want to," snapped Harrington as the last vestige of the morning's meditation fled.

"Don't mind," explained Sam good humoredly. "I'm used to smoking city cigars. That's Lafe Spence's new barn over there. Before he got it done a pillar man came along and painted one end up with his sign. I saw him paint the pillar and I thought he must be the man that was just what he built barns for, and the man said if that was the case he guessed he'd paint the other end too."

"Well, what's the rest of the story?" demanded Harrington sharply when a pause was not broken by speech.

"I was waiting for you to ask that question," said Sam. "The answer is that he painted the tail barn, just like you see it. Late's constable, and he threatened to put him in the lockup if he didn't do the right thing."

Harrington cursed the evil fortune that brought him into contact with his brother-in-law and lame country jokes, and his irritation against Fannie was born again. He had been smitten well when he would have gone to the shore where amateur humorists could be snubbed into silence. He was glad when the old homestead came into sight and Ella, on the front porch, waved him a welcome.

The remainder of the afternoon and the evening passed off pleasantly enough, though the morning brought his troubles. Harrington was always at his worst in the early hours. He had been compelled to rise a full hour before his accustomed time, and there was no hot water for shaving. The studs were not in his clean shirt, nor was the shirt laid out. At home, even from the sick bed, Fannie had made certain that his shirt and things were looked after. It was the little things that Harrington cared about, and he was in a black humor when he came to the breakfast table.

He had been slow in dressing, and the breakfast was cold, though it had been placed in the oven to keep warm. Sam had already left the table and Ella was alone.

Harrington pushed the bacon from him.

"I never eat bacon unless it's crisp," he said irritably, "and I don't like the eggs fried so hard. Can't you cook some more that are just set? And for heaven's sake, Ella, please remember I can't eat hot bread for breakfast."

"It will only take a few minutes, Ben."

"Then hurry," he commanded. "I hate to sit idle at the examination."

There was a little examination from Ella, and Harrington looked up into Sam's gray eyes. There was an expression that he did not like.

"You're not going to sit idle at the table," exclaimed Sam. "You're going so hurry up and eat your bacon and eggs. You don't have to eat biscuit if you'd rather have bread, but that stuff was all good when breakfast was ready. If you want to spend an hour in your room cursing your enemys and your collywobbles, get up earlier or go to bed earlier and be more peaceful."

"You're welcome here, Ben, because you're Ella's brother and because she's got her heart set on a visit from you, but you're just got to understand that you can't curse and domineer my wife into a sick bed the way you've done your own."

Harrington swallowed a retort; then he devoured the bacon and eggs. Sam stood over the chair, and Ben knew that he meant what he said.

When the meal was done Sam left the room, and Ben followed him out to the yard to stammer an apology. Then he sat on the horse block while he smoked a cigar, and Sam's words came back to him.

His brother-in-law was right. He had cursed and domineered his wife.

There had been lots of mornings when he had acted worse than this and with far less cause.

When the nervous breakdown had come he had been too tired to let it go on with his vacation plans, and not until he had left home did he realize how much Fannie's quiet ministrations had meant.

Once or twice he had rose to go into the house and ask Ella's pardon, but he thought of something else, at home and sank back into his chair again. He made light of his misery.

"I guess I can buy my whole miserable carcass for a penny," retorted Ben dolorfully. "I've been sitting here thinking over what you said."

"I didn't mean to get so hopping mad," said Sam shamefacedly.

TRAITS OF MRS. ASTOR

New York Society's Leader For Twenty Years.

RARE SOCIAL DISCRIMINATOR.

Graciously Kind and Thoroughly Self-Restrained. She Never Lost Her Temper—Well Read and Highly Cultured—An Example of Her Tact, Maintained Leadership by System.

Mrs. William Astor, who recently died at her Fifth Avenue home in New York, was the undisputed leader of society in that city for a score of years. Her reign ceased only with her life. The record of her personality and her achievements forms one of the most interesting chapters in social history.

Mrs. Astor came of old Knickerbocker stock. Before her marriage to the late William Astor, second son of William B. Astor, and grandson of the original John Jacob Astor, she was Carrie Webster Schermerhorn.

The name of Schermerhorn was high upon the honor roll in the days of old New York, and the family homestead was long the proudest historical landmark in the city of Brooklyn.

Caroline Webster Schermerhorn and William Astor were married in 1853. The bride was then twenty-four, the groom three years old, but as delicate as a man of fifty. In later years his infrequent appearance in society, notwithstanding the social pre-eminence which his wife had achieved, was a matter of comment.

In the years of Mrs. Astor's wedded life there was little quiet. Even then, however, the woman of her family wielded great power in New York society. The right of leadership was conceded to the wife of the eldest son, John Jacob Astor. She was Miss Gibbs of South Carolina before her marriage, and her beauty and personal charm were the pride of Europe's greatest rulers.

As a young matron Mrs. Astor lived at 34 Lafayette place, in the heart of New York's fashionable life at that time, and practiced the social accomplishments which later aided in her rise to leadership. The best obtainable tailors took her measure. She was taught to sing, to play the piano, to paint on canvas and china and to speak French with the fluency of her native tongue.

It was that thorough mastery of the French language which won for Mrs. Astor a cordial welcome from the most aristocratic circles of Paris. At St. Germain, a welcome never accorded, no social historians assert, to any other American woman.

Mrs. Astor did not achieve social leadership abruptly. She won it by quiet, unostentatious progress. With consummate skill as early as 1875 she had become the acknowledged social queen of her authority. From that time to the end of her life the smile or frown of Mrs. William Astor was the making or the marring of a social party.

With the death of Mrs. Paran Stevens, Mrs. Astor, still a comparatively young widow, became the undisputed social queen of New York, and her son Ward McAllister, Mrs. Astor prepared the world famous list of society's Four Hundred.

It was by system that Mrs. Astor maintained her leadership. Every year of her reign half a dozen scandals were exposed almost exactly the details of its predecessor. She gave her annual ball on or about the same date and opened the Newport season with the same regularity.

She arose at the same hour, year after year, followed the same careful mode of living, seldom departing in any way from the strict routine and always retiring at 11 p.m. While her guests were banqueted with great liberality, Mrs. Astor breakfasted on toast and tea and dined on simple food. It is said that she had not eaten a course dinner in the last twenty years of her life.

Mrs. Astor never ranked among the best dressed women in society, but her manner was that of the grande dame. It has been said of her that this manner did more to win social pre-eminence for her than did all the millions of her husband. There was nothing of affectation in it. Time wrought no change. The year before her death, four years ago, was the Mrs. Astor of recent years, dignified and unbending.

She never stopped to follow any new style in personal deportment. Her slow, stately way of walking never varied. She never danced, although her great ballroom was annually opened in her residence to the élite.

Mrs. Astor dressed simply and plainly with jewels morning, noon and night. Her street gowns were of muslin cloth and her evening costumes of velvet and brocade. Royal purple and deep green were her favorite colors. Her love of green was reflected in her collection of emeralds, including a massive necklace of emeralds and diamonds, a tall collar thickly studded with the gems, of immense size, and mounted at $1,000,000.

Mrs. Astor has worn her emeralds frequently at the opera and at functions in her own home. They have been the envy of rich women throughout the world. They have not been conspicuous for their expensiveness. In point of floral decorations they have been even simple in comparison with the lavish displays made by other women in society. There were several wealthy women in this most exclusive set over whom Mrs. Astor ruled with absolute authority. Her income from her husband's estate was $50,000. This sum together with the income on $80,000 settled upon her by Mrs. Astor at the time of their marriage and a large sum set aside by her own, constituted her entire fortune.

In the winter of 1882-3 Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, was planning her famous costume ball, suggested by her guest, Lady Mandeville. There was great speculation as to whether Mrs. Astor would put the seal of her approval on this function by attending. Mrs. Vanderbilt early announced that she would not invite Mrs. Astor unless the latter called on her. Slides were taken, much bitter feeling was stirred up and the episode fast developed into a sensational story. Mrs. Astor, in her usual kind tact, solved the question by calling on Mrs. Vanderbilt. Thereupon the invitation was sent. It was said at the time that Mrs. Astor was induced to call by her younger daughter, Miss Caroline Astor, now Mrs. Orme Wilson, who was very desirous of going herself.

In her everyday life Mrs. Astor was simple. It has been conspicuously so during the last four years. Her home abounded that of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, but it in management the two were entirely distinct.

When not going out or formally receiving guests, Mrs. Astor remained alone with her companion, Miss Simrock.

For many years Miss Simrock, a little woman of English birth, has been Mrs. Astor's faithful attendant.

Together on off social nights they have dined, either in the New York house or the Newport mansion, on simple fare selected on plain, inexpensive lines which was kept especially for these quiet home dinners.

On state occasions Mrs. Astor banqueted her guests from the famous china service of 212 pieces which cost $30,000. It was made in the noted Meissen factory at Dresden and bears the name of the second crest of the Astors.

The glass is that used by Europe's grandest rulers ordered the set and then balked at the price.

Mrs. Astor had certain prejudices which she cherished to the end of her days. She had a horror of being photographed, and the only picture of her in existence is the orthodox one painted by Mrs. H. H. Hobart, now Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt Robinson.

The occasion was that of the young woman's first winter in society.

Mrs. Astor kept in touch with the topics of the times and was well read and highly cultured. During the long years of her reign she had attained an uncommon degree of popularity, the secret of which, it was frequently remarked, lay in the fact that she never spoke ill of any person and did not condescend to gossip of her associates.

Her chief characteristics were a gracious kindness, a rare social discrimination, and a strict self-restraint. She never lost her temper and preserved complete self-control even in the most trying situations. When scandals were told her she generally deplored them, was loath to express an opinion, and when curious or intrusive people tried to get her to range herself on one side or another of some social question she generally heard them out without comment and then changed the subject.

Even her enemies—for, like all leaders, she had—admit that she was generally free from affectations and small vices. She was a woman who always rode heavily in the effort not to attract attention. When Mrs. Astor drove it was either in a closed carriage or a hired cab. She never rode in an automobile but once, and then announced, "This is the last time." She kept her word.

Even in the last few years of her life, with the increasing infirmities of advancing age rendered this a sore burden, Mrs. Astor until quite recently did not relax in the discharge of her social duties. Her life was regulated by inflexible laws. She arrived in New York the first of October each year with the opening of the Metropolitan opera season she received her many friends informally on Sundays. At the opera, where she occupied parlor box 7, she never failed to attend the first performance.

She made her appearance at 9 o'clock almost to the minute, and the arrival of the first act was always a signal of great jewels, regarded as a proclamation that the New York season had been formally opened.

In December Mrs. Astor always gave a series of great dinners, and if there were any distinguished foreigners in town they were invited.

On the first Monday in January Mrs. Astor gave her annual ball, which was the one great social event of the year in New York society. On that evening the Astor box at the opera remained unoccupied, though the guests did not assemble in the Astor room. The Astor ball was very loyal to her friends, and at her ball were seen all the representatives of the fashionable set of older New York, even if they were hidden nowhere else.

Mrs. Astor was charitable in an unusual way. She preferred to bestow her charity through the organized societies.

Whoever may reign in Mrs. Astor's stead, her memory, embalmed in fear and respect, will long survive.
